A Note about Turtle Diary Activities

For all of the multiple Turtle Diary online activities, in this tool kit, to track progress with data, teachers and/or parents have to create a free account, depending on if you use the activities as just in class assignments with your students or you just use them as a type of “at home” enrichment activity. To explore the entire website, and not just some of the Turtle Diary activities sprinkled throughout this tool kit, the home page to Turtle Diary can be found here: <https://www.turtlediary.com/> (Also, Turtle Diary has free videos, downloadable printables, and worksheet generators based off of the interactive activities on the website.)

A Note about PBS Learning Media Activities

For the few PBS Learning Media interactive activities, in this tool kit, in order to track progress with data, teachers have to create a free account, depending on if you use the activities as just in class assignments with your students or you just use them as a type of “at home” enrichment activity.

To explore the entire website, and not just some of the PBS Learning Media activities sprinkled throughout this tool kit, the home page to PBS Learning Media can be found here: <https://www.pbslearningmedia.org/>

Another Note: About Flash Player

For many of the interactive activities, throughout this tool kit, one will be prompted to “Allow” Flash Player if it is not enabled automatically on your device. Once Flash Player settings are set to “allow,” then those interactive activities requiring Flash Player will work.

One More Thing...

If you do not live within the United States of America, some of the links contained within this tool kit may not work for you, but having said that, not every link within this tool kit is from a website hosted within the United States. Some websites are hosted by other countries. If a link does not work for you, first check to see if you have allowed Flash Player for that particular site. If you have, that may mean, for whatever reason, your country is blocking access to that specific website since I do my best to periodically update inactive links within this tool kit; so with all of that in mind, feel free to use the Internet links contained within this tool kit, as you are able, with students as all resources in this tool kit are free educational resources.

What's My Number? (A Guessing Game)

If playing the interactive version of the game with students, it's recommended that you share your screen while doing so because the immediate feedback correct answer flashes extremely quickly across the screen, which will make it hard for most students to visually process if they actually got the correct answer, but if you share your screen while you play, and the students guess the correct answer, you can then just reward students with whatever your reward/praise system is during your online classes.

Sight Word Bingo (Pre-K-3rd)

Review of sight words; an adult, if the student has not learned how to make an independent choice, should choose a sight word level (pre-primer-3rd grade). Once the game is set up, through the offer of choice, all the student has to do is tap with his/her finger, so if the student can move his/her finger, then he/she can play this game if he/she has access to technology and can visually discriminate within the field shown on the screen.

Tracing Letters and Numbers to a Beat

Students trace letters or numbers to a musical beat. The tracing does not have to be 100% perfect, so if the lines are approximate, the activity still accepts the work of the student. If the tracing is completely “off,” a hand prompts the student where to trace. An adult will likely have to set up the activity if the student has not, for example, learned how to make a choice yet, as before you trace, you have to choose whether you want to trace either letters or numbers. Then you have to choose a beat (rock, pop, island, or classical). Then the activity begins.
